Henry James Clegg is one of the prosperous and progressive merchants of Heber. He has built up a large and increasing merchandise business on South Main street. His stock consists of family supplies such as groceries, dry goods, boots and shoes, hats and caps, underclothing, notions, etc., and he deals in all kinds of farm and dairy products. He also carries a choice line of Christmas goods for the little folks and his store has long been headquarters for holiday turkeys, chickens, squash, etc., for the housewives.

To meet the increasing demand of his business he was obliged to enlarge his store this season to double its former capacity and to increase his stock proportionately.

Mr. Clegg and his brother, began business May 17, 1901, with a small stock of goods. Later his brother drew out and he has continued with the business which has steadily increased ever since it was started. He has won the patronage and confidence of a large circle of people of which he is justly proud and is trying hard to maintain a continuance of their good will. His motto is and has been to live and let live, believing that it is better to assist people to rise than to try to crowd them down.

THOMAS CLOTWORTHY

Thomas Clotworthy, son of Hugh Clotworthy, was born May 18, 1852

He married Sarah Horner, November 30, 1874, in Salt Lake City. Thirteen children were born to them.

Thomas Clotworthy died August 24, 1905.

Elizabeth Margaret, William Cole, Lional and Marvis.

Thomas Clotworthy married Sarah Horner on November 30, 1874, in the Salt Lake Temple. There were born to them 13 children: Hugh Thomas, Sarah Jane, Thomas C., William, Janet, Mary Elizabeth, Margaret, Lional, Viola, Melando, Genivive, Marvis, and Jean B.

In the public and political life of our county, Mr. Clotworthy has been an important figure. He was chairman of the board of county commissioners. Before Heber was incorporated as a city, he served two terms on the town board. His ability and influence were also given recognition only a few days before his death, when he was elected a director in the new Mercantile Company that was being organized.

He was a quiet, honest man, energetic and aggressive in any worthy cause. He was a friend at all times to those in distress, yet modest and unassuming in his achievements. His straightforward, honorable course in life won him many friends.

In his early life, Mr. Clotworthy hauled logs and at one time had a contract to  furnish wood for the Ontario Mine at Park City. He also owned and operated a shingle mill for some time, and was thereby able to secure enough means to start in the cattle business. He later invested in sheep, and at the time of his death he was one of the leading sheepmen of our county and state. He also owned and operated a butcher shop, with Jack Hicken as a partner.

Thomas Clotworthy was the victim of a horrible accident. He and his son-in-law, Jack Witt, his nephew, Hugh Jacobs, with other sheepmen of the county, were shipping their sheep to Kansas City. At Tucker, a little station on the Rio Grande Western, the helping engines had been attached to the front and rear ends of the train to help it up the summit. Thomas, with the rest of the party following, started back into the caboose. Through some cause he was thrown from his hold, and the helping engine pushed the caboose over his body, almost severing one leg, fracturing his skull and inflicting other injuries which later proved fatal.
